BAD BOYS YOU WANT TO TAKE HOME

PREORDER TODAY!

Hello Lovelies!

We are only a few days away from the release of Things Left Unsaid... And I have a special teaser for you. <3 Prepare to fan yourself. ;)

With my legs butterflyed around him, I can feel his dick rubbing up against my clit. His strength torments us both as he hovers me there, his tip brushing my heat in time to his pulse that throbs through his shaft.

“Do you want me, Susanne?”

I’m not sure why, but that he chose to call me Susanne matters.

“Always,” I rasp, not caring about how many vulnerabilities I’m exposing to him.

His forehead plants on mine as we stare at the space between us.

I help guide the tip home but he does the rest—as soon as he’s inside me, he controls the pace as gravity impales me upon him.

Inch by glorious inch, he fills me.

The Bradford Boys - Book 1

She nods, looking up at me brightly. "It's why I only date golfers."

"What?" The word jumps from my mouth, a cross between a laugh and a protest.

Her pretty eyes widen, and a small dimple appears at the side of her mouth as she fights a smile. "Do you have a problem with that, Mr. Murphy?"

You bet your ass I have a problem with it, but I'm not about to say it out loud.

"Not at all, Miss Bradford. Date who you want. I just can't imagine somebody like you settling down with a golfer."

"What's wrong with golf? It's a sport that requires skill and patience, and it involves zero physical contact." She counts on her fingers. "I don't know a single golfer who's sustained a concussion playing the sport."

"If you call that a sport," I quip.

"How many golfers are at risk of getting CTE?"

Holding up my hands, I straighten. “You got me. I’m just saying, from what I’ve observed, you’re not shy about physical contact.”

And it’s sexy as f--k.

“I’m not getting hit in the head, and I’m not watching them get hit in the head either.”

My brow furrows. “You don’t watch the games?”

She shakes her head no. “It’s too hard after what happened to our dad and knowing the risks. I wish they’d all retire, but you can’t tell my brothers what to do.”

I’m not sure how I feel about this new information. I do know how I feel about it. I don’t like it one bit.

Gentling my tone, I take a step closer. “Life is uncontrollable, Dylan. I could walk out the door tomorrow and get hit by a car.”

“Don’t say that,” she whispers, lifting her hands as if she’ll say a prayer to ward it away.

“My point is, you’ve got to do what you love, and we love the game.”

“Trust me. I know.”

“You can’t control who you love or what happens. Saying you only date golfers is crazy.”

“Maybe, but if I don’t date football players, I’m not at risk of falling in love with one.”

Our eyes meet, and the air grows quiet and still. My stomach tightens, and somehow I’ve gotten close enough to touch her again.

She’s standing in front of me in that short skirt and tight shirt, and her soft breasts rise quickly with her breath.

It’s been a while since I’ve been around a woman so open and vibrant and full of life. Someone who likes to play and dance and experiment with hot peppers.

A woman who has no business settling down with a man who plays golf...
