Hello Lovelies!

We have a guest author today in my newsletter!

When she asked me if she could use my newsletter, and when Conor then reminded me of his takeovers during his search for Star and how he'd do much worse to help his daughter... Well, I had no choice but to say an enthusiastic YES!

So, without further ado, I present to you, Konvos with Kat. Volume 1 -- I guess.

Part of the deal is also that the interviews will be published on The Pigeon Creek Herald website, so if you ever miss one, you'll be able to read the back log over there. <3

Konvos with Kat

Cole Korhonen, one of the new wunderkinds of the New York Stars, walks into the bakery looking like sex on a stick.

And I mean that literally.

He's so hot it should be illegal and though he quite clearly knows it, honestly, he couldn't not be aware of how the entirety of New York City is jealous of his future wife, Mia Charles.

Still, his ego might be as massive as his thighs (potentially bigger) but his eyes are kind. That, in itself, shouldn't be discounted. And when he orders a large iced latte with gingerbread syrup, I feel like I've found my person. Because fall is a lifestyle choice, not just a season.

Dressed in a surprisingly low-key outfit of jeans, Henley, and high-tops, he cuts a cool figure as he slips off his Ray-Bans on the hunt for me amid the crowd.

When a woman with a child crashes into him, he holds up his coffee cup out of harm's way, steering any spillage off them, and carefully detangles the boy's arms from his legs before signing a paper napkin with a smile.

Though the collision drew attention, this is NYC so no one takes any notice of anything.

Cole's kindness, however, is renowned among hockey players. It's safe to say that most of the boys who billeted with the Bukowski family in Winnipeg all treat their fans the same way—with appreciation and genuine goodwill.

Once the small interlude is over and, after finding me waving at him, he sighs and takes a deep sip of coffee before sitting opposite me.

We're at Ellie's Bakery in Midtown where the brownies are to kill for. I can sense Cole's dismay when I fork up a bite of my own triple chocolate, double fudge brownie, nervously trying to cut the silence that landed between us after he arrived at my table.

As I wonder if tempting him away from his fiancée is possible with a brownie, Cole stares mournfully at my dessert.

Thankfully, he breaks the ice.

To read what Cole has to say to Katina head over to PCH!

Let me know who you'd like Katina to interview next and I'll see if I can't use my influence on her. (Conor can bribe them into agreeing, LOL!)

Hope you loved that little glimpse into Feckers/Stars' life!

Happy reading!

Much love,
Gem/Serena
xoxo

THE SECRET HOOK UP BY PIPPA GRANT

The Secret Hook Up

by Pippa Grant

You'd think nearly dying trying to get out of a too-tight gown in a dressing room and being saved by a strong, competent man was a good thing.

Not so much, though, when that strong, competent man is your ex. Your secret ex.

And the reason you need a gown is because you're part of a charity auction.

The charity auction where he gets into a bidding war to win you.

And now, because you're one of few female coaches in professional baseball, and he's the captain of the local professional hockey team, and he paid a ridiculous sum of money for you...
